INTERFACE PROJECT

The explanatory text after Step 9 should read:

This step might or might not do anything, depending on what was done in Illustrator before you started this project. If you or someone else changed anything and then quit the application, those changes are remembered when Illustrator is relaunched. Because we can't be sure what your default settings show, by completing this step you are resetting the user interface to one of the built-in, default workspaces so your screen shots will match ours.

The explanatory text after Step 9 should read:

Illustrator files open in the document window. Across the top of the document window, each open document is represented by a separate tab; the document tabs show the file name, current view percentage, color space, and current viewing mode.

Although most of the functionality remains the same, the Adobe Typekit web site has changed since the first printing of the book. The following image reflects the current Typekit web site and functionality (descriptions of the web site elements are unchanged):

Clicking any version of the Add Fonts from Typekit button launches your default browser and shows the Browse Fonts page of the Adobe Typekit Web site. ...

Clicking a preview in the list shows that font's details page, where you see all the available fonts in the family you selected. Clicking the Sync button makes that font available in your Creative Cloud account, so you can use it in any Adobe application were you are signed in.
